Building For The Future

Lubavitch Yeshiva breaks ground for two new buildings.

Donor Alan Zekelman helps Mendel, 5, and Levi, 4, Greenberg of Pudong, Shanghai, China lay the foundation stone. The Greenbergs' parents are both alumni of the school and are Lubavitch emissaries in China.

Joyous dancing erupts after the groundbreaking ceremony.

This was not your ordinary groundbreaking. Lubavitch rabbis with long beards and yeshivah students, both in black hats and garb, danced with community leaders July 10 as dirt was shoveled symbolically at the site of the new Harry and Wanda Zekelman campus of the Lubavitch Yeshiva and Mesivta in Oak Park.

The $3 million complex with its two 25,000-square-foot buildings is one of the largest private school constructions in the state, providing jobs and expected to attract more students from around the world.

The campus, to be completed in fall 2012, was funded by Alan and Lori Zekelman of Bloomfield Hills in honor of his late parents, who believed in the importance of Jewish education.

The buildings, on about 4 acres at 15151 W. 10 Mile Road in Oak Park, will replace the original campus on 9 Mile, which still will house the community's synagogue and elementary school.

The first new building will be dedicated to classrooms and learning; the second will be a dormitory. The campus will serve up to 180 male high school and yeshivah students and eventually 180 boarding students.

Rabbi Berel Shemtov, director of Lubavitch of Michigan for more than 50 years, is moved to tears as he shares the original blessing from the late Lubavitcher Rebbe at the founding of the school in 1965.

Currently, students come from 10 countries and 17 states. About 75 percent are boarders, including some from Metro Detroit. □
